Gas asphy.tint inn.--Remove the victim from the poisonous atmosphere. If he is still breathing, administer oxygen from a tank with a bag and mask for 20 minutes. If he is not breathing and his jaws are locked so as to interfere with effective artificial respiration, pry them open and wedge with a piece of wood, and remove any foreign body from his mouth. Then give artificial respiration as shown below. The following directions for applying the prone-pressure treatment are quoted by permission from a pamphlet by Dr. Charles A. Lauffer, medical director, relief department, Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co. Follow these instructions even if the victim appears dead. THE POSITION OF THE PATIENT. The patient is laid on his stomach, face turned to one side, so that the mouth and nose do not touch the ground. The patient's arms...
