Excerpt: .pinafores, were sprawling about the mud floor and on the doorstep, engaged in mysterious occupations only understood by themselves. Ach, but the bread is beautiful! said Katootje, addressing herself in a voice that would have been clearly audible half a mile away. Tant Gezina herself couldn t bake it better. Kinders! what a grand dinner we shall have today! The children looked up eagerly and left off playing to listen. Fresh bread--ach, the dear good Oom Pieter to bring us that sack of meal--and the fresh butter that Boetie Edouard bought for a treat, and a whole basinful of pumpkin besides--there s a nice dinner for you! Give me fresh bread and butter and I ask nothing better! The prospect of the dinner proved too much for the patience of the second youngest Vermeer, who forthwith began to demand an earnest of the feast....
