Excerpt: . . . and tha main abound with turtle and fish, which may probably be caught in al) seasons of the year, except wheu the weather is very tempestuous; so that, all things considered, there is not perhaps a better place for ships to refresh at upon the whole coast than this island. And before I dismiss it, I must observe, that we found upon it, as well as upon the beach in and about Endeavour River, bamboo, cocoa-nuts, pumice stone, and the seeds of plants which are not the pro. duce of this country, and which it is reasonable to suppose are brought from the eastward by the trade winds. The islands which were discovered by Quiros, and called Australia del Espiritu Santa, lie in this parallel; but how far to the eastward cannot now be ascertained: in most charts they are placed in the same longitude with this country, which, as appears by the acount of his voyage that has been published, he never saw; for that places his discoveries no less than two and twenty degrees to the eastward of it. As soon as we were without the reef, we brought to, and having hoisted in the boats, we stood off and on upon a wind all night; for I was not willing to run to leeward till I had a whole day before me. la the morning, at day-break, Lizard Island bore S. 15 E. distant ten leagues; and we then made sail and stood away N. N...
