Last words from my Laugh--Tolerance--Faith and Reason--A simile--The Garden of God--A worldflower-- Fare thee well. To-night, I began, but my bronze interrupted. To-night, he said, with a strange mystery hidden in his silver voice-- To-night, child of man, you shall give heed to me. Know, first, that this is the fiftieth evening we have had speech together--the fiftieth, and the last. Before I speak again, you and yours, and your children, and your childrens children, and the work of your hands and brains, and perchance the pomp of your nation will all be dust; for, ere then, the world shall roll through five hundred more years. Who knows, indeed, that my own battered bronze carcase will hold together so long This is a blow to me, said I; and it shows the folly of not keeping careful diaries of the great concerns...
